

Helping Employees Stay at Work With Workplace PossibilitiesSM

“The Workplace Possibilities program has helped employees feel good about themselves and their work. After receiving accommodations, employees are more productive and happier at the workplace.”

THE CLIENT

The Missouri State Employees' Retirement System manages benefits for 48,000 government employees. Its operations staff works with HR reps all over the state to help members with retirement, life insurance and long term disability benefits. MOSERS members include those who work for the legislative and judicial systems, universities and public safety institutions.

THE CHALLENGE

Without a formal stay-at-work or return-to-work program, MOSERS was seeing a high level of absenteeism and presenteeism among its members. This was a difficult problem to address because employees work in a wide variety of jobs all over the state.

Logistical issues

- ▲ 100+ locations statewide
- ▲ 500+ HR reps in many locations — and not all under the same umbrella
- ▲ 100+ types of jobs in a variety of work environments

Communication factors

- ▲ Members spread across 39 agencies, including nine colleges and universities

How could MOSERS reduce costs while increasing productivity and employee engagement?

THE SOLUTION

Introduced Workplace Possibilities

The Standard added its Workplace Possibilities program to MOSERS' Long Term Disability insurance program at no extra cost to the organization or its members.¹ The program's proactive approach sends consultants to workplaces to help identify at-risk employees before they ever miss work. Our consultants also work with employees on disability claims to get them back to work faster.

Launched Awareness Campaign

The Standard and MOSERS partnered to communicate the value of this new program. We targeted HR reps, managers and employees directly to spread awareness through a variety of channels.

Built Momentum in Person

A Workplace Possibilities coordinator from The Standard visited a select number of work locations. The coordinator met with HR reps and, in some instances, recommended accommodations to employees on the spot. Word soon spread as employees began to realize how the program could help them stay productive.

Unified Our Services

By unifying our services with those provided by MOSERS, we're able to offer employees innovative services that work together. These include absence management programs and online ergonomic assessments from The Standard, and health insurance and weight loss incentives from MOSERS.

A Stronger Partnership – and Well-Earned Recognition

In 2018, The Standard awarded the Workplace Possibilities Champion Award to MOSERS. It also showed how a true partnership can lead to meaningful changes and results for employees and employers.
